Two Synthetic Legal Dispute Scenarios for Testing

IMPORTANT: FICTIONAL TEST MATERIAL ONLY
All names, dates, amounts, locations, and facts in this document are invented. This is not a real court filing, legal opinion, or legal advice. It is designed to test document extraction, evidence-grounded Q&A, issue spotting, missing-fact handling, and report generation. It is not a contract, so it is not a substitute for the contract-risk test PDF.

CASE 1 — CONSUMER DISPUTE: DEFECTIVE REFRIGERATOR

Synthetic case reference: C-TEST-001

Parties

Complainant: Meera Rao, a fictional consumer. Opposite party: CoolHome Appliances, a fictional retailer. Manufacturer: FrostPeak Electronics, a fictional company.

Facts stated by the consumer

1. On 5 March 2026, Meera purchased a refrigerator from CoolHome Appliances for ■38,500. The invoice states a one-year product warranty and a five-year compressor warranty.

2. The refrigerator stopped cooling on 18 March 2026, thirteen days after delivery. Meera contacted the retailer's customer-care email on 19 March and received ticket number CH-1842.

3. A technician visited on 22 March and wrote on a service slip: “cooling failure; further inspection required.” The slip does not identify the root cause or state whether the problem resulted from misuse.

4. Meera says she requested repair or replacement twice. The retailer replied on 25 March that the product must be inspected by the manufacturer before any decision. No repair or replacement had occurred by 10 April 2026.

5. Meera seeks repair or replacement, reimbursement of ■1,200 for food spoiled during the outage, ■5,000 for inconvenience, and reimbursement of any filing costs allowed by the appropriate forum.

Questions this scenario is designed to test

1. Summarize the consumer's complaint and requested remedies.
2. Which facts are supported by documents, and which are only allegations or estimates?
3. What additional evidence would strengthen the complaint?
4. What facts are still needed before discussing the appropriate consumer forum or limitation period?

5. Draft a neutral chronology of events without inventing missing dates.
6. What possible responses might the retailer or manufacturer raise?
